Building on common foundations, this degree offers two upper-level specializations: World Literature and Multicultural U.S. British Literature.

At the foundations level , requirements recognize the importance of firm grounding in Language Arts and Literary Interpretation. These emphases correlate with stress on skills foundation in current pedagogy. The Linguistic Foundations requirement recognizes the structure of language as well as the formal grammar of English.

The literary Analysis requirement offers training in close reading, knowledge of literary genres, literary theory, social and historical contextualization of literature, and literary interpretation.

In Literary Traditions includes historical surveys of World, European, U.S. and British literature and selected courses in classical genres, foundations and such recent topics of post colonialism.
